So where do you begin? On land – at glorious ancient temples, along the streets of modern cities, into the rainforest canopies, and past volatile volcanoes. Or on the waters – skimming the surface on an evening sail, discovering the vibrant undersea world, and for those who want to get out on the water, rather than under it, exploring the vast Panama Canal. HAWAII

It may sound cliché to say there is something for everyone in Hawaii. But because the Aloha islands are home to exotic terrain, steep mountain ranges, deep valleys, gorgeous beaches, and bustling cities, you would be hard-pressed to find someone who has visited any of these islands and not fallen in love. The truth is, there are endless experiences to be had for a wide range of personalities – so much so that a month-long trip might be considered too short.

In addition to matchless sun, sand, and surf, Hawaii offers a wide range of outdoor adventures, including hiking, biking, horseback riding, and four-wheeling. Cultural and historic sightseeing, festivals, nightlife, and other recreation add to the mix.
